Considerable excitement prevailed on our streets Monday afternoon when a man drove rapidly into town from the east, with the news that a load of hay had been tipped over at the foot of Bang's hill, and that two men were pinioned beneath it. A score or more immediately hastened to the spot, and Dr. Hamilton was hurriedly conveyed thither, the unfortunate men being soon released and brought back to town in Butler's bus. The victims were J. N. Babcock and son Wilbur, who had been into the country for a load of hay and were coming down Bang's hill when the loosening of a bolt allowed the tongue to fall to the ground. The horses plunged and the load was thrown forward with the men underneath. Wilbur was doubled up like a jack-knife and received severe bruises and strain of the back; his father struck on his head and was also knocked senseless by a blow on the head from the hay-binder, inflicting quite a scalp wound. Internal injuries are feared and, though somewhat better at this writing, his condition is considered critical. The young man will soon be about.

Nelson of Paw Paw, and Mrs. Dollie Belding of Mattawan.
